The invention relates to a tape cassette (or VHS cassette) for the recording and the reproduction of sound and/or video signals, comprising a housing, a housing lid forming an opening for a tape withdrawal path of the tape cassette, at least one reel shaft, a metal plate provided with a receiving portion for the tape reels and having an aperture, a cover sheet forming a first and second cover shell for the housing, the first cover shell being provided on the one side with an aperture, a door and on the other side with a recess, a first and second cover shell and a front face connecting the two cover shells. Tape cassettes for the recording and the reproduction of sound or video signals of the so-called VHS type comprise a housing composed of two shell halves which are welded together. The housing is divided into a top, a bottom part and two side parts, the two side parts together forming a receiving portion for the tape reels. The tape withdrawal path runs through the side parts of the housing. The two housing half parts are made of an elastic plastic material to form the housing, which housing comprises the aforementioned receiving portion for the tape reels on the one hand and openings for the ejection of the tape from the tape cassette on the other hand.
