Autogenous grafting of articular cartilage has inherent problems, as well as considerable morbidity and potential host rejection. Biological and biocompatible replacement materials may be used to generate new cartilage. In tissue engineering approaches, cells are seeded onto biomaterial scaffolds. A variety of scaffold materials have been used, including synthetic polymers, collagen, and alginate. Cell-seeded scaffolds can be used as a cell delivery vehicle, as a three-dimensional template for regenerating cartilage, and as a delivery vehicle for growth factors. MUST READ: Critics say jury's decision to convict Michael Brown's killer to be unconstitutional The jury responsible for deciding the fate of Ferguson, Mo. police officer Darren Wilson found him guilty of the killing of unarmed Michael Brown on Friday. According to The Guardian, the six-person jury deliberated for about nine hours before reaching a unanimous verdict. Wilson was found guilty on counts of second-degree murder and manslaughter. The jury had a tough choice: convict on second-degree murder or manslaughter. Each of the two charges carried a potential life sentence. The Guardian reports: Vernon Randolph, Brown's godfather, said Brown was "an innocent child who paid the ultimate sacrifice to help stop injustice." At the same time, he said: "We pray that the officer receives the justice he deserves." The verdict came in the wake of a day of violence in Ferguson. According to Fox News, a Ferguson police officer was injured in the eye when a protester allegedly threw a bottle at him and then followed him in an SUV. The SUV was then pelted 82157476af
